

Can Anyone Hear Me? (Jewish News Advertorial - September 2008)

Counselling hits the headlines in phases, as does the crime rate and the latest sports sensation. These stories sometimes are read, may be discussed and often are forgotten until the next headline. The difference with counselling is that the problem in question is rarely discussed and usually never forgotten. So how can this be resolved? By finding people who not only listen, but hear; who understand how we feel without judging us; who treat our problems confidentially.

The counsellors at Raphael Jewish Counselling Service are such people. Each skilled counsellor is a dedicated professional, working for an organisation at the forefront of its field. Raphael's services are available to all Jews, individuals and couples, living or working in London and the Home Counties. Raphael is a registered charity and clients pay according to their means; no-one is turned away for financial reasons. So if you, or someone you know, might benefit from being heard, phone our confidential number - 0800 234 6236 - and a trained counsellor will respond to your message, usually within 24 hours.
